One trick: the island forces a win

PROTOTYPE ART

Dev −3

+1 for the trick, −4 for the serpents on the two 10s.

Cleo and Dev each sail one island clockwise. Dev leads next.

Forced to win: Dev can't follow Spice, and his only Silk is the 10. Moored at a Silk island, he must trade it: laid sideways it counts as Spice, beats Ben's 7, and takes Cleo's serpents along with his own.

About the Game

A must-follow trick-taker where the island under your ship is a second suit you must honour.

Sinbad's merchants trade their way round a ring of islands. Take tricks for treasure, but the serpents guarding the richest crates bite back. One voyage each; the highest total wins.

Features

- Forced, never helpless. The island picks the suit; you pick the rank. Duck under, or take the trick on purpose.
- Every route is public. Ships only sail clockwise, so the table sees where you'll be next, and leads to catch you there.
- Steer with your voids. Following keeps you parked. The suits you run out of early choose your itinerary.
- A new map every voyage. The ring is reshuffled each hand, and twin islands side by side can demand one cargo twice.

One Voyage, Four Bearings

CHARTING
Eight islands are shuffled into a ring each voyage. Read your hand, then moor anywhere: your route runs on clockwise from there.

IN PORT
Trade what it craves
Can't follow? If you hold your island's cargo, you must play one, sideways. It counts as the led suit and can win.

ONWARD
Sail on
Every card that doesn't follow, trade or discard, sails your ship to the next island. Never blocked; ships share freely.

THE RECKONING
Count the serpents
+1 a trick, −1 a serpent: one on every 1, two on every 10. Serpent cards lie face up, so all can count what is still at sea.

CONTENTS 40 cargo cards (four cargoes, 1–10) · 8 oversized island cards · 5 ships · a how-to-play card · a score pad. Small box, no board, no tokens.

STATUS Rules complete · rule book written · playable in the browser · ready for table testing · prototype art
